

Foreword

It is my privilege and honour to introduce to you the Ghana and UNESCO Magazine produced by the Ghana National Commission for UNESCO. The magazine seeks to serve as a source of information on UNESCO's activities and co-operation with Ghana.

This second edition features articles of major UNESCO sponsored activities. The articles draws from the various areas in the Organization's broad global vision of attaining quality education for all; mobilizing science knowledge and policy for sustainable development; addressing emerging ethical challenges; fostering cultural diversity and inter-cultural dialogue; and building inclusive knowledge societies through information and communication.

It is our expectation that the issues raised such as climate change and its impact on our environment, the need to preserve and promote our natural and cultural heritage as well as our collective efforts in achieving the Education for All Dakar goal by 2015 deadline, will in particular, arouse the keen interest of our reading public.

Let me take this opportunity to express my gratitude to the contributors who spent time preparing the various articles included in this publication. Equally, I commend the local institutions which have volunteered to advertise their activities in this magazine that seeks to contribute to a worthy national cause.

Special thanks also go to Editions Afrique Océanie for the dedication and quality of printing work. We look forward to a continuing mutual working relationship.

Thank you.

Hon. Alex Tettey-Enyo (MP)
